MYSTERY OF THE ICE.

Pathetic Story of Tenement House Life In New York.

During the intensely hot weather of last July a woman sat in an ill ventilated room of a back tenement in the great east side of the metropolis, leaning over a bed where lay a sick child. "He is worse," she said, "and I must for all who will enter for pardon and have the doctor." consolation and the other door opening She went to the fire escape, in a narrow, dark shaft, where the sun never shone, to look for a neighbor to help her in her extremity. No one was there, excepting a woman on the fire escape below, who had moved in the day before. The mother asked her to hasten to the corner drug store and send the doctor from there, but she shook her head. The mother turned back, hastened into the narrow public hall and there

The Noise Located. For the last two years members of the Baptist church of Saco, Me., have been annoyed by a sound in the church building. While it was not especially troublesome, it was annoying from the fact that it was constant and could not be located. The sexton hunted everywhere for it, but without success until the latter part of last week. In making a more thorough search than usual he found tucked away in a gable end a swarm of bees and about fifty pounds of honey.
